MILITARY LAW AND ITS TRIBUNALS

BY

COLONEL JOHN I. ROGERS

Former Judge Advocate General of National Guard of Pennsylvania

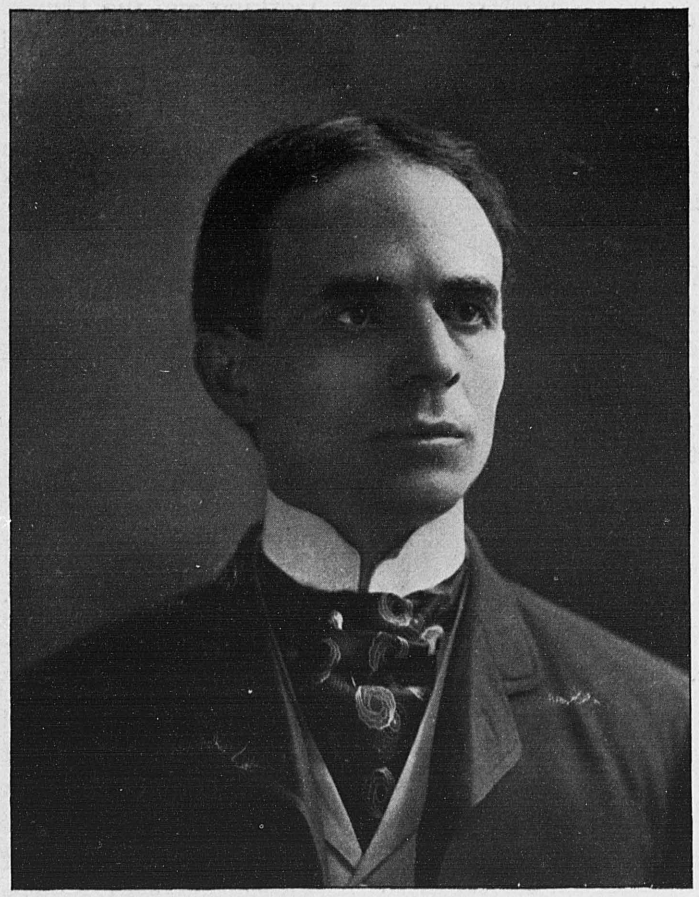
Yet nearly every State code, until a few years ago, required that not only the organization and drill of its uniformed militia, but its administration of military justice, should conform to and be governed by the rules and practice in force in the United States Army. The pioneer commonwealth in changing such an impracticable system to one suitable to the peace establishment of a volunteer force, only occasionally in uniform and on duty, was, of course, Pennsylvania. And, as our Guard since 1887 has admittedly possessed the most modern line and staff organization, and, facile princeps, the best military jurisprudence, which is constantly being flattered by imitation, it can be taken as a model of what military law and its tribunals should be, and the rest of this paper will be devoted to its elucidation.

The War of the Rebellion scattered the uniform militia of the State, leaving at its close a few time-honored organizations which kept intact their entities, either for the preservation of their titles to seniority or for their social or club features. Those really became the nucleus around which rallied, and from which afterwards grew, our reorganized Guard. The numerous Statutes governing the militia, as it was erroneously termed, from early in the century had been partly repealed and partly supplied by the four Acts of 1861, which lost much of their application when Appomattox ended the war. The Act of 1864 was supposed to pave the way for reorganization, but it was a failure from the start.

The Act of 1866 gave quantity, if not quality, to reorganization by dividing the State into twenty-one geographical divisions, each of which was headed by a major general, who, in some instances had more officers on his staff than in his line. On paper the Act provided for 323 companies, aggregating 1,126 commissioned officers and 13,566 enlisted men. To quote from Adjutant General Latta's report of November 30, 1882. it was a "cumbersome, unwieldy body, with scattered rendezvoux, numerous chiefs, inferior and incomplete equipments and without uniformity in dress. Its personnel bore the burden of maintenance, the State merely paying for the officers' commissions. Four supplements followed in as many years, but failed to improve previous legislation.



JAMES FRANCIS BURKE, Esq.,
A PROMINENT AND REPRESENTATIVE ATTORNEY OF PITTSBURGH

In 1873 the force was reduced to 200 companies, and in 1874 eleven major generals were lopped off, leaving the still ridiculous number of ten, but financial encouragement was given the struggling companies by an annual appropriation of four hundred dollars to each, besides varying allowances for armory rent. It was a great improvement over previous systems, but the small appropriation covered only a fraction of actual expenses, leaving unprovided for not only necessary comforts but necessary equipment for actual field service, as demonstrated during the labor troubles of 1874 and 1875. It was not, however, until the riots of 1877, when for nearly a week the great railroads of our State were only run by the permission of a mob, that the community in general, and our law-makers in particular, awoke to the fact that the mere physical courage of men, led by skillful officers—many of them war veterans—could not, without better equipment, necessary appliances, regular rations, and, above all, departmental organization, be effective in upholding the law and preventing its riotous violation, without the unnecessary sacrifice of life or health in its accomplishment.

From the fires of the wreckage at Pittsburg arose the phoenix of reorganization, in the shape of the Act of 1878. By it the ten divisions and the ten major generals were merged into one. Three brigades, with an expansive power, at the Governor's discretion, to five, with as many brigadiers to command them, and a maximum of one hundred and fifty companies of infantry, five of cavalry and five of artillery, divided among the three brigades and constituting the one division, made a compact military force shorn of much of its high-sounding rank, for generals became colonels and the latter majors, and they in turn captains or plain civilians. With this reorganization came liberal appropriations "to completely clothe the soldier in a dress and equipment modelled and patterned after the United States Army and manufactured at the government arsenals under the direct supervision and inspection of regular army officers." Company allowances were increased and per diem pay were also voted to officers and privates while in actual service and at the annual encampments. The staff was also reorganized and the departmental officers thereof given "correlative" duties to those of similar departmental officers in the United States Army.

During this period, from 1864 to 1878, military law manifested its presence occasionally by a court of inquiry or a court martial, but as there are no records thereof to be found among the State archives, it is a fair presumption to say that if the proceedings and procedure were sec. reg. it was due more to the care and skill of the officers constituting the courts and their respective judge advocates, than to any prescribed system of administration, for there was none.

The Act of 1878, however, took a long step in the right direction, and, according to General Latta, "engrafted upon the code system of courts martial trials and punishments well calculated to meet the ends of military justice."

Under this statute and a few unimportant supplements of 1879 and 1881, the National Guard grew and flourished into the best organized and uniformed militia in the world, without peer or competitor, if we are to credit the unanimous commendations of the United States officers, detailed for their inspection, endorsed by such competent authorities as Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Hancock, and by numerous foreign officers who visited our camps and fields of active service. It is true other States could claim as well drilled corps; all could boast more brilliantly costumed troops; some were better armed, equipped and housed, but no commonwealth presented such a compact division, that could mobilize as a unit, with subsistence, transportation, ordnance, medical and every other department, moving like clockwork, and in so short a time as could the National Guard of Pennsylvania during the two decades preceding the Spanish or Cuban War.

I can quote no better authority on this point than Major General George R. Snowden, commanding for so many years our Pennsylvania Guard. In his admirable report of December 31, 1896, he said:

"It is to the organization, and the system and the smoothness and efficiency with which they work in producing great and substantial results, and not the perfection of the manual or the absolute straightness of a company line that a state must look. As the late Major General Hartranft—my distinguished predecessor—remarked, the regular service secures the efficiency of the organization by the proficiency of the individual, while the militia service secures the proficiency of the individual by the efficiency of the organization."

It was natural, therefore, when President McKinley on April 23, 1898, issued his call for 125,000 volunteers to back up the demand of Congress that Spain "relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba," to expect that our splended division would be accepted in its entirety because of its universally conceded superior organization.

When afterwards, in obedience to orders from Harrisburg, ninety-nine per cent. of the rank and file of that division rendezvoused at Mt. Gretna on that stormy night of April 28, 1898, all the soldiers from the major general down to the latest recruit, fully expected that the service and discipline of many years in building up such an effective unit of force, would not be set at naught, and that their general officers, accompanied by their experienced departmental staffs, that knew so well how to administer to their necessities and comforts, would lead them wherever their colors went at duty's summons.

Governor Hastings, as Commander-in-Chief, and his energetic Adjutant General Stewart, all the line and staff, many United States officers (who had constantly praised the Guard because of its unique organization) and Pennsylvania's united Congressional delegation all combined to influence the President and Secretary of War to accept our little army of 10,800 men with its organization intact, just as it was, just as it had so often mobilized—but in vain.

While other reasons were given for this undeserved refusal of so reasonable a request, the real explanation was undoubtedly fear of the jealousy of Congressmen from other States, some of which had but a Falstaffian militia, who would demand similar "political" favors under penalty of lack of appropriations for the war.

Yet as late as May 13th Governor Hastings had not given up hope; for at the close of a review of the full complement of our troops, after their muster into the United States Army, he telegraphed to the Secretary of War from Mt. Gretna as follows:

"Ten thousand eight hundred men, as brave and loyal as ever followed a flag or defended a country, marched past the Governor in review this afternoon. No grander sight has been witnessed since the historic days of '61 and '62. Pennsylvania has responded to the call fully and promptly and has given to the nation's soldiery a division of troops composed of the best of her citizenship. We deserve recognition, by the appointment of our general officers. It should, if possible, be done to-morrow, and our troops will be wild with joy. The general officers deserve it. For twenty years they have worked to make possible the glorious exhibition of patriotism on this field to-day."

The division, however, did not go to the war, nor did any of its brigades as such. Mere skeleton regiments and battalions, expanded by recruiting, led by gallant officers, upheld the prestige of Pennsylvania, but the unselfish effort and sacrifice of nearly a quarter of a century was neutralized and wasted.

On the muster out of the troops at the close of the war, reorganization started again. With what prospects permit me, once more, to quote from the commander of the division. Said General Snowden in his report of December 30, 1899: "The process of mustering the old commands back into service was necessarily slow and attended by discouraging circumstances. * * * It is obvious that the old spirit and discipline have not been restored. Many capable and experienced officers have from various causes fallen out. * * * It will no doubt take a long time zealously employed in intelligent and persistent training and perhaps several encampments and tours of active service in the State, to regain the admirable tone and efficiency existing at the outbreak of the war with Spain."

While, therefore, it may be many years before the Guard again attains its proud pre-eminence as a military force, unanimously accorded to it prior to 1898, I am happy to say, however, that most of its staff departments suffered but little injury or interruption in their working and the Department of Justice, none at all.

A brief resume of its history may be interesting:

Although the fundamental Act of 1878 had according to Adjutant General Latta's report of that year, already quoted, "engrafted upon the code a system of courts martial, trials and punishments well calculated to meet the ends of military justice" it was not until 1883 that the system got proper impulse to fulfil such calculation. In that year, the Judge Advocate General's Department was organized by its then incumbent and an official report of its work submitted to the Commander-in-Chief for the first time. Under the new arrangement the division and brigade, judge advocates, as officers of said department, reported directly to the Judge Advocate General at stated periods, all trials of officers and enlisted men in their respective jurisdictions, together with such recommendations for improvement in the administration of justice as their experience might from time to time suggest.

Frequent correspondence and personal intercourse between those officials secured comparisons of views and the interchange of ideas which resulted in many amendments to the system, especially in the formulating of charges and specifications, of the proofs of service thereof, of the examination of witnesses, of the administering of oaths, of the certifying of records, etc.

The study of the system, however, brought to light its numerous defects, the chief of which was the many inconsistencies, contradictions and altogether irreconcilable sections in the code, made up of twenty different Acts of Assembly, jumbled together in a manner certainly not conducive to good order and military discipline. Subject, however, to this paramount statutory law of Pennsylvania, the constitution and jurisdiction of our courts martial and courts of inquiry and the procedure and practice therein, were by the Acts of 1864 and 1881, made to conform to those "prescribed for the armies of the United States." It therefore, became necessary to also study the "Articles of War," the Army Regulations, Acts of Congress, decisions of the United States Courts and the opinions of the Attorney General and of the Judge Advocate General, and of the ruling and decisions of the various other tribunals and officers clothed with authority for their interpretation.

I have already adverted to the inconsistencies and defects in the Federal system and the constant complaints of the United States Judge Advocates as to the difficulty of interpreting and enforcing it.

At the Armory, a reception and banquet was tendered this fine body of citizen cavalry, for which hospitality the members of the Troop expressed their highest appreciation.

THE coming session of the Pennsylvania Legislature should be marked with the enactment of laws which will put a stop to the anarchistic opposition of organized labor to the organized National Guard of the State. Action of such a character, which will absolutely protect loyal young men who serve their State, is imperative. As matters now stand young men who are willing to serve as soldiers of the State are prohibited through fear of being debarred from following their trades, owing to the power of the anarchistic labor agitators. Treason is the only name applicable to the action of those who boycott a man because of service to his government. And then there are those short-sighted employers of men who make it a stipulation that none of their employees shall be members of the National Guard, and who do not hesitate to discharge employees who, putting loyalty above sustenance, perform their duties as soldiers only to lose their means of earning a livelihood.

The situation to-day is serious. Men hesitate about allying themselves with the Guard, and recruiting will be at a standstill. Measures strong and effective should be enacted to remedy the matter. A boycott against a soldier should be punished as treason, and an employer who discriminates against a member of the Guard should be made to pay a heavy fine for his acts.

The National Guard Association should take this matter in hand at once. An act should be formulated and the active co-operation of every officer of the Guard can be had to further its adoption. Every member of the Legislature should be subjected to pressure to aid in the passage of such a law.

The time is ripe for quick and drastic action if the National Guard is to be maintained.

GEORGE W. BROWN, of Uniontown, a member of Company C, Tenth Regiment, has been expelled from the Brewers' Union because he is a member of the National Guard. The union will reinstate him if he can get his discharge. There should be some way for the law to punish this. If there is no law on the books which will do it, there should be one passed immediately. It is a blow aimed at one of the institutions of the State for the enforcement of law and order. To permit such action to pass unnoticed is an invitation to infractions of the law which will require a large standing army to preserve the peace within our own borders.

TWO COMPANIES of the Third Brigade, G, of the Fourth, and K, of the Eighth, are composed very largely of members of the Mine Workers' Union, and other companies of these regiments have a number of mine workers in their ranks, but they did their duty like the true soldiers they are.

Personal Mention

Rev. Willis H. Stone has been appointed Chaplain of the Ninth Regiment. The Regiment will now "reform."

Captain Charles T. Cresswell, Regimental Adjutant Third Infantry, has asked to be placed on the retired list of officers.

The first regiment to forward its consolidated rifle practice report was the Ninth. Lieutenant Bennett forwarded his during the last week in October.

Sergeant Edwin H. Ridgway has been elected Second Lieutenant of Company I, Eighth Regiment, succeeding Lieutenant Harry C. Houtz, promoted to Battalion Adjutant.

The members of Battery A regret exceedingly the loss of First Lieutenant Edgar M. Church, who resigned owing to pressure of business. It is stated that Sergeant Whitesides will be elected to fill the vacancy.

Colonel Joseph B. Hutchison, recently elected Colonel of the Eighth Regiment, has re-appointed all the members of the staff of the late Colonel Hoffman, excepting Battalion Adjutant M. Park Moore, who is succeeded by Lieutenant Harry C. Houtz, of Company I.

NOTES

The rifle practice season will close November 29.

It is probable that the Twelfth Regiment will lose its band through the recent tour of riot duty. Its enlistment expired about the middle of November.

The commanding officer and staff of the Third Brigade and the Governor's Troop hold the record for service during the late tour of duty in the coal regions. They were on duty ninety-four days.

It is stated upon good authority that none of the changes made in the uniform and equipment of the regular army in General Order No. 81, will be made in the Guard for at least another year.

The term of enlistment of the Eighth Regiment Band expired while the regiment was on duty. The musicians declined to re-enlist, so the Perseverance Band, of Lebanon, was enlisted. The regiment is a great gainer by the change.

Any member of the Guard desiring to procure copies of photographs contained in the Rifle Practice (September), or in the November number, can do so by communicating with our official photographer, Harpel, Lebanon, Pa.

On the evening of November 18 Company G, Twelfth Regiment, gave a very enjoyable "pink tea" to its members. A pleasant feature of the evening was the presentation of a gold medal to Private Winfield Scott, who has served thirty-two years in the National Guard.

The new United States Army regulation sabre is an excellent and practical sidearm, and since the return of the troops from the coal regions several of the line officers of the Third Brigade have been presented with the same.

The uniforms of the National Guard of Pennsylvania are in very bad shape as a result of the recent tour of duty. Those troops which were called into the field in July and August have worn out both their canvas and blue uniforms, and need a complete new outfit. Those called later did not ruin their canvas.

There is trouble between the players of the Williamsport Y. M. C. A. basket ball team, one of the best in the State, and the physical director of the Association. As a result it is probable that the team will this month play in the armory, and be known as the Twelfth Regiment team.

As the Presidential procession passed up Broad street, Philadelphia, on Saturday, November 22d, a pleasing incident occurred in front of Odd Fellows' Temple, where a detachment of cadets from Cheltenham Military Academy were drawn up in line, in full dress uniform. As the carriage containing the Nation's Executive drew near they gave a hearty cheer for President Roosevelt with their college yell. The President arose in the carriage and graciously acknowledged the compliment.

The State Rifle Match Camp in all probability will have an innovation in the presence of a chaplain next season. It is reported officially that Colonel Barnett's chaplain, Rev. Henry W. Temple (10th Infantry), has developed into a wonderful shot and it is intended to have him shoot on the regimental team next season. This is unparalleled in the history of the Guard. During the recent campaign in the coal regions, the reverend gentleman made a first-class markmanship score of forty-six points and concluded that it would be just as easy for him to make a sharpshooter's score, which he did with perfect ease, making a total of seventy points, 200, 500 and 600 yards.

NAVAL NEWS

After the completion of this year's summer cruise on the U. S. S. Panther, regular drills for the Naval Battalion were discontinued as usual for the rest of the summer and early autumn, and the officers and men then started in to organize impromptu river trips and camping parties. The U. S. S. Shearwater was taken out a number of times, usually starting early on a Sunday morning and returning the same night, and a couple of times starting at noon on a Saturday and returning the following Monday morning, having spent Sunday around Cape May. Once also the members of the Battalion and their friends went out for a "moonlight trip" to Chester and back. This was called a "moonlight trip" because the Nautical Almanac said that the moon would be full on that particular night; but as no one saw the moon it was necessary to take the Almanac's word for it; however it did not rain. A number of trips too were made by different parties of enlisted men in the cutters or the Shearwater's launch. One of these parties, in charge of Coxswain Mason, sailed up to Burlington Island and camped there for four days, and several others at various times camped on the Delaware or New Jersey Shore down the river. Now, however, all the boats except the launch have been laid up for the winter, and the winter routine has been begun again.

A new feature of the winter work this year is the class for special instruction in engine-room work, under Ensign Shaw. The engine-room men of both divisions now report on board the St. Louis on Monday nights, and after taking a half hour of physical drill with Division B, are turned over to Mr. Shaw, who has prepared the schedule of instruction which is given below. At the end of the course an examination will be held to test the ability of those now holding or who may apply for engine-room ratings, and this examination will include also questions as to any matters connected with the construction or operation of the boilers, engines and accessories of the U. S. S. Shearwater and the U. S. S. Panther, with which the men should be familiar on account of actual experience.

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY

LEWISBURG, Pa., November 10, 1902.

L'Agenda, the College Annual, to be published this year by the Class of 1904, Bucknell University, has been dedicated to Colonel J. K. Weaver, M. D., of Norristown, Class of 1861. Colonel Weaver has been a Trustee of the University since 1891, and has always been interested in the institution and its development.

He also served during the Civil War and the Spanish American War, and has an honorable record as a soldier. At present he is Division Surgeon, with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, on the staff of the Major General of the National Guard of Pennsylvania.

WM. C. GRETZINGER,
(Adj. 1st Batt., 12th Reg.),
Registrar.

The recent tour of duty in the coal regions again demonstrated the admirable organization of the National Guard of Pennsylvania and its ability to move quickly when summoned. No other State in the Union, not even the United States Army, could equal the record of the troops which responded to the first call. It was midnight the night of July 30, when the order was issued calling the Eighth and Twelfth Regiments , the Governor's Troop and Companies F and G, Fourth Regiment, to Shenandoah. At 6.35 o'clock the morning of July 31, General Gobin, with a portion of his staff and four companies of infantry arrived in Shenandoah. At 9.10 A. M. the Twelfth Regiment, one battalion of the Eighth and the canvas arrived. At 1 P. M. the Governor's Troop, the balance of the infantry and the Commissary Department, with a car containing ten days' rations, was on hand. Major Cameron and Sergeant Bernheisel had gone to work when the call was issued and had a carload of provisions ready when the troop train was ready to leave Harrisburg. By 3 o'clock the troops were rationed for five days and cooked and ate supper under their own canvas. Where is there a National Guard that can equal this record.

An amusing incident is told of Private Stauffer, of Company "I," Tenth Infantry, who, for physical disability, was rejected for the U. S. Volunteer Service during the Spanish-American War and Philippine insurrection. This man was so determined to accompany his old regiment, in which he had served many years, that Colonel Hawkins consented to take him along as a hostler. On reaching the Philippines, he found his services in this line unnecessary. Colonel Hawkins subsequently enlisted him as a cook and attached him to his old company. Stauffer's being enlisted in the City of Manila, he was allowed more than double the travel pay of any other member of the regiment, aggregating upwards of $500, which amount amply compensated him for the time between his original rejection in the United States and his enlistment in the Philippines.
